Sherry Moore is the President and Executive Director of The 21st Century Village Community Learning Center, Inc., a nonprofit organization providing services to youth and families in the Selma and Smithfield areas. A 1985 graduate of Smithfield-Selma High School, she became the fourth female in her family to graduate from UNC-Chapel Hill in 1989. She also received her master's degree in counseling in 1995 and has worked for the past 23 years as a school counselor in Johnston County. Prior to becoming a school counselor, she also worked as a residential counselor with Johnston County Mental Health and as a family services counselor with Community Action. Ms. Moore recently renewed her national board in certified counseling in 2017 and graduated from North Carolina State University with a Master's degree in school administration. Her extensive experience in working with children and families from early childhood until adulthood, along with her educational background will provide valuable insight and strategies that support parents and help youth in achieving their lifelong goals.

As a parent and an educator, she strongly believes in investing in the lives of youth. Childrearing and education have become two of the greatest concerns that we all share in our society and within our smaller community. Helping to address and resolve these concerns was the purpose of creating and establishing The Village. Young people need the influence of caring adults and positive role models in their lives. Yet, parents and adults need the same principles of care and support in order to become better citizens, better parents, and better role models. Our mission is to become a support system for parents, children, and community members by encouraging others to work collaboratively to resolve the issues specific to their own needs in order to build a stronger community.

Sherry is a native of Selma, NC, the third eldest of five children. She is the proud parent of one son, daughter in law, and granddaughter, residing in Greensboro, NC.
